Clarify the idea – The communicator must be clear about what he wants to communicate

Completeness of the message – The message should be relevant to the nature and purpose of communication

Understand the receiver – The communicator should be aware of the total physical and human setting

Use appropriate channels – The channels should be appropriate to the message

Consistency in communication – The message should be consistent with objective

Feedback – It involves effective participation and improves mutual understanding

Simplified structure – The communication can be strengthened by simple procedure and regulating the information flow

Improve listening – The sender and receiver must listen with attention, patience and empathy

Mutual trust and confidence – It improves the effectiveness of communication

4.7 Interpersonal Relationship (IPR)

"Without communication there is no relationship. Without respect there is no love. Without trust there is no reason to continue."

~ Unknown

4.7.1 Definition

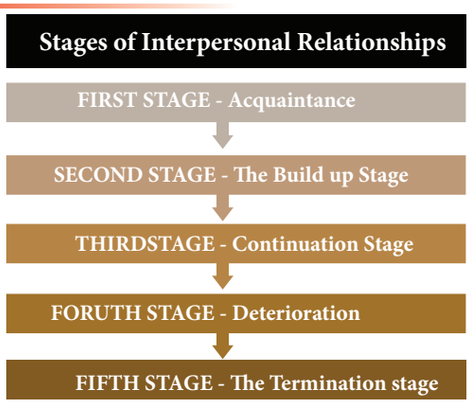

IPR is any or all behaviour which a person undertakes in the presence of others. These are social associations, connections or affiliations between two or more people.

4.7.2 Purposes

- To learn about self and society
- To establish and maintain relationships
- To alleviate loneliness
- Helps for diversion
- Helps to meet the needs of others
- Gain confidence and satisfaction

4.7.3 Stages

According to George Levinge, a Psychologist, there are five stages

Acquaintance: It depends on previous relationship, physical proximity, first impression, etc.,

Nursing-Gen_Chapter 04.indd 54 07/05/18 12:44 PM