sleeve pattern at the bottom, matching the centre point of the pattern. Mark the shoulder points as S and S^1 on the bodice front and back. Match them to center of the sleeve point 'L'. Draw the outline for raglan sleeve pattern. This sleeve is stitched with seam that runs from the neck line to the armhole line (Figure 13.7).

13.1.2.6 Kimono Sleeve

Kimono sleeves are mostly used in garments where more comfort is needed. It is used mostly for sportswear, kids wear, dance costume and ladies tops. In kimono sleeve there is no seam either at the armhole or in the shoulder. The pattern of the sleeves is cut together with the bodice. Thus the sleeves run from the side seam of sleeve to the side seam of the bodice (Figure 13.8).

13.1.2.7 Magyar Sleeve

Magyar sleeve is also like kimono sleeve where the bodice pattern is extended from the shoulder line approximately 5 cm outside from the highest point of the shoulder. Lower arm circumference is drawn perpendicular to the bodice pattern and attached at the edge of the pattern (Figure 13.9).

13.1.2.8 Full Sleeve

A full sleeve pattern is an extension of the basic sleeve pattern but the length of the sleeve is extended till the wrist. The circumference of the sleeve is changed accordingly. Full sleeves are used mostly in women's wear, kurtas and men's shirt. In men's shirt, these sleeves are finished with a cuff at the lower edges (Figure 13.10).
